ensured instrument in the service of the Russian cause. This objective could be realized either through a military reaction within the National Russian Party or through an energetic step by General Radisson, or through the creation of a third force. There is persistent talk of disbanding some of the groups in view of their reunion. This, of course, would be like a judge going to Geneva by General Radisson, and people would say that that was there for all time, and it would have been so much simpler to remain together from the beginning.

"It is clear that Khrushchev took the initiative to set up this 'third force' convinced that sooner or later the great Western powers will need that force's help in the anti-communist struggle. American and neutral circles here took the initiative as cynical provocation, and the apparent resurrection of the Asian Government is viewed with some skepticism."
